Program Talk

For this Thanksgiving Day, KPFK has many reasons for giving thanks, notable among them the generous and enthusiastic support extended by our listeners in the Fall subscription drive. In addition to the much more secure financial base provided by an increased subscription roster, our subscription drive was gratifying as well because of the many opportunities we had of meeting with you and getting to know better those who worked closely on the drive. Again, for all of you, who contributed so much, our deepest thanks.

For Thanksgiving Day we have scheduled a number of programs from the American traditions of music, literature, and public affairs. One of the intellectual's most important roles is that of the critic, and much of KPFK's broadcasting is critical of much in American life; we do not always devote as much time as we would like to an examination of the many virtues of American cultural history. You'll find both in our programs from the American traditions, from Edmund Wilson's biting analysis of false patriotism, to James Agee's lyrical celebration of the lives of Southern sharecroppers in which — in spite of the grinding poverty — he finds so much of human-value. We hope you will enjoy our holiday programming.

about public affairs

The Wine Series of programs is initiated herein. This is the most complete coverage of wine that we've ever heard. In this first Folio, we concentrate on wine's general aspects and on its place in California. On Tuesday the 13th at 10 P.M., the fact and fiction of wine as food and medicine is examined. On Thursday the 15th, you learn about the mysteries of flavor and aroma, and about the history of wine in California. On Tuesday the 20th, we look at the California wine industry, its vineyards and processes. And on Saturday the 24th, you hear about one man's struggle to start a commercial vineyard. In succeeding weeks, we will attend to the wines of the world, and eventually we will talk about vintages. In truth, here is wine!

We thank photographer MAX YAVNO for donating our cover picture from his recent book "Wines of California."

for young people

Art at KPFK

One of the major art events of the year will take place on November 25, when leading artists of Southern California will display their latest major works in a one-day art exhibition sponsored by KPFK. The exhibit, which is scheduled to be shown at the Raymond Burr Galleries, 456 N. Rodeo Drive in Beverly Hills, will include one or more paintings, drawings, or other artistic work from a large and varied group of artists.

All work displayed at the exhibit will be for sale and collectors will find many pieces never previously shown to the public. The exhibition is presently being selected by a committee headed by Earl Carter, KPFK's art critic.

Future announcements will list the artists showing at the exhibition.
